

May 15, 2019

To Whom It May Concern,

Austin Treherne has asked me to recommend him and I am most pleased to do so. I met Austin when he was a student at The Edward R. Murrow College of Communication at Washington State University, Everett. He took a number of courses from me which were demanding, required good writing skills and a good work ethic. Austin met and exceeded all my expectations.

In the time I have known Austin I have been impressed with his energy, thoughtfulness and engaging personality. He is a creative, self-motivated student with a passion for learning. He also shines in collaborative environments bringing a positive outlook and enthusiasm to any team.

In addition to his academic pursuits, Austin is an avid distance runner (half marathons) and rock climber. He also has a unique hobby he shares with his grandfather; building armor to wear on horseback while shooting a bow and arrow! He told me, "It's not really a sport, it's more a way for me to spend time with my grandfather." I mention this because it is an indication of both his human spirit and his curiosity in all things. Austin cares about people, enjoys learning about their passions and is one of those rare individuals we all wish we could be, a good listener.

Austin is a joy to be around. He excels in his field of communication and he will be a success. He will also be a credit to any organization or operation who employs him.

It is my sincere hope you will give him your every consideration.

Sincerely,

Lucrezia Cuen Paxson
Assistant Professor
Edward R. Murrow College of Communication
Washington State University
915 N. Broadway
Everett, WA 98201
Lc.paxson@wsu.edu